Descriptive summary of Franconia College:
Franconia College was, from its beginning, an experimental and liberal place. Professors sought to teach via collaboration and participation rather than by lecturing. Students were asked to evaluate professors, suggest curriculum, sit on committees, and govern themselves. There were experiments in course offerings and curriculum design, some of them ahead of their time (such as ecology/environmental studies in the early 1970's). Students could do independent projects for credit (a couple of them built and operated a maple syrup/sugaring house), take courses in studio art, film, weaving or ceramics in addition to the usual academic fare, or even undertake to teach a course themselves. There was an emphasis on performance in music, dance and theater (Botstein was a musician and composer) and the arts were encouraged. At the same time, there were serious endeavors to contribute to the surrounding community: the college operated a nursery school to serve the town (and students learned about early childhood education by working in it), attempted to provide educational services to a near-by prison, offered B.A. courses for day-student and adults over 26 years of age. Summer programs included Elderhostel weeks as well as music, art and literature festivals. In the early years, the college had a close relationship with the Peace Corps and students received academic credit for their Peace Corps service.

Time-line:
Below is a summary of a more detailed time-line put together from newspaper clippings found among the printed materials in the collection. The school intermittently subscribed to a clipping service, but administrative personnel seem to have been inconsistent in retaining the clippings, as whole months and years are missing. The full time line is in folder 00, box 1 with other secondary source materials.
1960-1962
Franconia College (1962-1978) was founded when the Board of Trustees of Dow Academy decided the grounds and buildings should be used to establish a junior college. The Academy had been founded in 1885 as a secondary school but by the 1950's and early 1960's was being used as a public elementary school for the town of Franconia. At first the new establishment was to be called 'Dow Junior College,' but in the course of the 75th anniversary celebration of Dow Academy in 1960, the trustees decided it should be named Franconia College. It apparently took some months to organize the new venture as there is no information in the record about decisions made in 1961.
1962-1965
The first person to serve as president, John Fallon (served 1962-1965) was appointed in 1962. In early 1963, a former hotel was purchased to contain dormitory and classroom space. The college officially opened in September, 1963 with an enrollment of 75 students.
1965-1968
In 1965, Richard Ruopp (served 1965-1968) replaced John Fallon as president (the record does not indicate why or exactly when Fallon left) and the first class of 50 was graduated, receiving A.A. degrees. Enrollment increased in the next few years, and the college began granting B.A. degrees in 1967.
1969-1970

1968 to 1969 was a time of upheaval. Students participated in the national anti-war movement with sit-ins and demonstrations. The college was raided by police, resulting in drug and morals charges being brought against a few students. Ruopp was asked by the trustees to resign and mass professor resignations in sympathy followed (all of which the trustees accepted.) Ruopp was replaced by Larry Lemmel (served 1968-1970). There were financial problems and the college underwent Chapter 11 reorganization. There was considerable negative press in the Manchester [NH] Union Leader, an influential and conservative newspaper.

1970-1974

1970 to 1974 were, for the most part, years of stability and success. A new president, Leon Botstein (served 1970-1974), made national headlines as the youngest college president in the country – he was only 23 when appointed. Under his tenure, the campus expanded (both by purchase and construction), enrollment increased to 400 students, precarious financial equilibrium was achieved via grant funding, and new programs and initiatives were undertaken. Some of those new programs, however, evoked the hostility of the Governor, Meldrim Thompson, and yet more negative press from the Manchester Union Leader.

1975-1978

1975 to 1977 were years of increasing financial struggle and also continued and unrelenting attacks by both Governor Thompson and the Manchester Union Leader. The new president of the school, Ira Goldenberg (served 1975-1978) was unable to stop the downward spiral. Increasingly, grants were not forthcoming, and by 1976, students and faculty members were doing much of the routine cleaning and maintenance chores to save money. The record contains almost no documentation of the year 1977. In January of 1978, two days before the beginning of the semester, the college announced it would close because of financial difficulties. In May, the real estate and building contents were auctioned. There is no documentation of how the decision was made to close or of the winding-down of the institution. There is no information about how creditors were paid, what became of the buildings and campus, or later whereabouts of staff.

Collection Scope and Content Note:

Franconia College was in northern New Hampshire (in the town of Franconia) and was in operation from 1960 to 1978. Records of the preceding institution, Dow Academy, are not present except for a few catalogs and early by-laws. Except for auditor's reports and Board of Trustee minutes, most categories into which the Franconia College records have been sorted do not have full chronological runs and the gaps are unexplained, as it is not known why, how or by whom the school's records were kept when it closed suddenly in 1978.

The records consist largely of institutional minutes, reports, and correspondence with official bodies of various kinds (accrediting or fund granting agencies, for example). Personal correspondence, personnel files and student records are also present; these are closed until 2047.There are no records of the early planning in 1960-1962 before the college opened, the process by which the decision was made to close it January, 1978, or the aftermath of the closing (fate of staff members, later ownership or use of facilities, resolution of outstanding debt.) The year 1977 is almost completely undocumented in the collections.

There are almost no photographs except a few head shots of staff members (in personnel files) and scenic postcards of campus (among publicity materials).

Arrangement:
The Franconia College Records came to the New Hampshire Historical Society partly in rough categories (Board of Trustees, Center for Community Service, Financial) but with over half of the material unsorted. They have been organized into 13 series:

Extent: 1.5 boxes
Scope and Content: Series three is organized alphabetically by program then chronologically. The Center for Community Service was a semi-autonomous department within the College that organized outreach to the surrounding community, summer programs, and advocacy of various kinds. Although the Center existed for much of the lifetime of the college, and there is material from 1968-77, bulk dates for the files are c. 1970-1975. A few files containing correspondence are closed until 2047.

Series 5: Curriculum, 1963-1977
Extent: 2 boxes
Scope and Content: Series five is organized alphabetically by course name or department. Items in the series include syllabi, course outlines, some assignments, and occasionally blank exams. Some are much more complete than others, and it is likely that not all classes and departments are represented. A chronological section of curriculum proposals and reports gives insights into the (sometimes wishful) thinking of faculty about the directions in which they wanted their experiment in higher education to go. Signed student evaluations of specific courses and professors and of individual professorial reflections on those courses is closed until 2047.

Series 12: Staff, 1963-1976
Extent: 4.75 boxes
Scope and Content: Series 12 on personnel is organized by subject, then alphabetically by surname, and then chronologically. Most of these records are closed until 2047 as some contain confidential personnel information. A few folders of general staff information, such as personnel policies and salary schedules are open to researchers. The personnel files, arranged alphabetically by surname, contain material regarding all employees, though primarily faculty members. The file contents are inconsistent. Most contain a c.v., transcript from the degree-granting institution the person attended, letters of recommendation and salary information but other files contain correspondence, evaluations, writings by the individual, etc. Files with extensive information are starred (*) after the person's name. Dates given are those of the contents of the file, not necessarily employment dates.

Folders 37-53 have been removed from this box and placed in a box at the end of the collection, to be returned here in 2047.

Series 13: Student Life and Student Records, 1963-1976
Extent: 2 boxes
Scope and Content: Series 13 is organized into two topics, student life and student records. Student life is organized alphabetically by topic, and student records are organized alphabetically by surname. The student life files are open to researchers and contain public information such as admission statistics, reports, forms and policies, commencement programs, financial aid forms and reports, flyers, notices and form letters, radio station WOMB logs, recruitment reports and ads, and social issue programming ("Impact" 1967, "War Resistance" 1972; "World Youth Forum" 1964). Student records, alphabetically by surname, are closed until 2047. These files are very inconsistent, sometimes consisting of only a course registration card and sometimes containing correspondence and papers or examinations. Student records also contain lists of matriculated students, dormitory assignments, and other miscellaneous papers.
