Collection Overview

Biographical Information/ Administrative Information:

Franklin Pierce served as the 14th President of the United States from 1853 to 1857. Pierce was born on November 23, 1804 in Hillsborough, NH. In 1824, he graduated from Bowdoin College in New Brunswick, ME. Peirce then went onto study law under Governor Levi Woodbury in Portsmouth, NH, at Northampton Law School in Northampton, MA, and under Judge Edmund Parker in Amherst, NH. In 1827, Pierce was admitted to the New Hampshire Bar. He went on to set up a law practice in Hillsborough, NH.

In 1829, Pierce was elected to the New Hampshire State House of Representatives. From 1832 to 1833, he served as Speaker of the New Hampshire House. Pierce remained a member of the New Hampshire House of Representatives until 1833, when he was elected to be a United States Representative from New Hampshire as a Democrat. Pierce left the House of Representatives in 1837 to enter the United States Senate, again as a Democrat from New Hampshire. He remained in the Senate until 1842, when he resigned to practice law in Concord, NH.

Pierce remained active in politics, serving as chairman of the State Democratic Committee. Following the election of James K. Polk as President, Pierce was appointed United States Attorney for New Hampshire in 1844. Meanwhile, Pierce also remained active in the state militia. Soon after the outbreak of the Mexican-American War, Pierce volunteered his service and was appointed Brigadier General in 1847. Back in Concord after the war, Pierce was President of the New Hampshire State Constitutional Convention. In 1852, Pierce was elected President of the United States as a Democrat. He held the office from 1853 to 1857.

Franklin Pierce was married to Jane Means Appleton on November 19, 1834. Jane lived from March 12, 1806 to December 2, 1863. She and Pierce had three children: Franklin, Jr., Frank Robert, and Benjamin. Both Franklin, Jr. and Frank Robert died under the age of 5. Benjamin died at age 11, in a train accident. None of the Pierce's children survived to adulthood. Franklin Pierce died on October 8, 1869 and was buried at the Old North Cemetery in Concord, NH.
