Biographical Note

Dorothy Mansfield Vaughan was born September 20, 1904 in Penacook, New Hampshire, the first child of Raymon Sanderson Vaughan and Mary Wilson Smith. Raymon, who was born in Redford, NY (4/9/1878) was a semi-professional baseball player and ran a billiards hall with his father (Rodney Sidney Vaughan). Mary Vaughan, daughter of Oscar E. Smith and Julia W. Gage of Penacook, was born in Penacook (5/5/1881) and was educated locally and at the private St. Mary’s School for Girls in Concord.

The Vaughan family, including brothers Donald (1/4/1907) and Oscar (4/16/1908) resided with Oscar and Julia Smith in the two-family home they owned at 57 Merrimack Street in Penacook. Oscar Smith was a bookkeeper at the Stratton and Merrill Flour Mill in Penacook, and had business interests in Portsmouth and West Ossipee. Oscar and Julia Vaughan appeared to have some wealth, as they also owned a summer cottage in York Beach, Maine.

Dorothy Vaughan attended the Charles Street and Summer Street elementary schools in Penacook; her strongest subjects were reading, geography and spelling. Dorothy her mother and brothers spent part of each summer at the Smith cottage in York Beach, and also visited relatives in Hebron, NH (Gage family) and Morrisonville, NY (Smith family). The family attended St. Mary’s Episcopal Church in Penacook.

In 1917 Raymon Vaughan took a job as a machinist at the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, and the Vaughan family moved to Portsmouth. Raymon and Mary rented a house at 390 State Street and enrolled the children at the Whipple Public School. Soon after arriving in Portsmouth Dorothy became involved with the Girl Scouts, which was forming its first troop. Before she graduated from high school she was named a Lieutenant, and was leading a group of girls not much younger than herself. Many photographs, letters, and journals attest to the wide-ranging activities of Troop #2, including historical tours of Portsmouth and overnight trips to the Vaughan cottage in York Beach. Through the Girl Scouts Dorothy Vaughan met many prominent Portsmouth women, including Rosamond Thaxter, grand-daughter of Shoals writer and artist Celia Thaxter.

In September of 1918 Dorothy entered Portsmouth Public High School. In addition to her core classes in English, History, French and Composition she took a special concentration in Domestic Arts. Dorothy was an average student, earning mostly “Bs.”

During her senior year Dorothy made an inquiry about working as a Page at the Portsmouth Public Library. A postcard from Hannah G. Fernald, Librarian, reads: “My dear Dorothy, if you still want to come in to the Library to help this winter, will you come tomorrow to have a little talk with me.” This was the beginning of Dorothy's fifty-four year career at the Portsmouth Public Library.

Dorothy Vaughan: Librarian

After she graduated from high school Dorothy was hired as the Third Assistant Librarian, working in the Children’s Department. In 1926 she was promoted to Second Assistant, and extended her duties to include inquiries about genealogy and the history of the Portsmouth region. In 1929 Dorothy was promoted to First Assistant, and took on the responsibility of cataloguing. Most of Dorothy’s training was “on the job,” overseen by Head Librarian Hannah Fernald, who was a graduate of the Pratt Institute of Library Studies. However, in 1931 Dorothy attended a ten-day Summer Library Institute at the University of New Hampshire, and in 1946 she took a correspondence course in “Cataloguing” through the University of Wisconsin.

Aside from her work at the Portsmouth Public Library, Dorothy Vaughan also helped at Camp Langdon, which was a part of the Portsmouth Harbor Defense system during World War II. During the spring of 1943 the Commanding Officer asked Hannah Fernald to aid him in organizing a post library. Miss Fernald responded by “loaning” Dorothy for one afternoon a week. Additionally, Dorothy gave up her mornings off for a period of three months to assist a soldier (who had been a Page at the Brooklyn Public Library) with sorting the vast amount of materials which had been contributed as the result of the Victory Book Campaign.

In 1945 Hannah Fernald retired, and Dorothy Vaughan became the head of the Portsmouth Public Library. Although she had not attended library school, Dorothy received a “Certificate of Librarianship-Grade 1” from the New Hampshire Library Association. This certification insured that “Dorothy M. Vaughan has fulfilled all requirements in education and experience to be librarian in a town of 10,000 population.”

Dorothy Vaughan’s contributions to the library field extended beyond her role in Portsmouth. In 1947 she was appointed to the NH Library Commission. She was also a member of the NH Library Association, the New England Library Association, and the American Library Association. She was President of the NH Library Association from 1954-1957 and Editor of the newsletter from 1952-1957.

Due to mandatory rules, Dorothy was forced to retire at the age of seventy (1974) from the Portsmouth Public Library. Hoping to stay until the long-awaited expansion of the library was completed, she sent a formal request to the Mayor and members of the City Council, asking for “extension of time to serve the city,” stating: “It now seems imminent and I would be grateful for the privilege of staying on until the new Library facility is dedicated.” The City Council denied Dorothy’s request, but referred the issue to the state Retirement Board. Eventually Dorothy was allowed to remain at the library for eighteen additional months in the position of Curator of Special Collections. Sherman Pridham took over the daily operations of the Portsmouth Public Library, while Dorothy oversaw the archives and historical collections.

On April 6, 1976, a front page article in The Portsmouth Herald detailed the final turn of events in Miss Vaughan’s career at the Portsmouth Public Library. At a City Council meeting on April 5, John J. Whorley proposed naming Dorothy “Librarian Emeritus,” honoring her fifty-two years of “dedicated service.” There was heated debate among the Councilmen, City Manager, and the Mayor, some of whom felt Miss Vaughan had been recently forced out of her position as Curator of Special Collections. Mayor Bruce Graves stated Miss Vaughan had reached her mandatory retirement age. Manager Calvin A. Cannery further noted “Miss Vaughan is under investigation by the Police Department for the disappearance of items from the library.” At the end of the April 5 meeting Dorothy was given the honorary title, but not before one Councilman noted there had been “slanderous remarks” made by those present.

Just as the nation was in the full grip of a bicentennial celebration Dorothy Vaughan, resident historian of Portsmouth, was unemployed for the first time in fifty years. In a way the timing was perfect, as there was an increased demand for people who could lecture and write about all matters historical. Instead of “retiring,” Dorothy found her days filled with meetings and lectures and research projects. For the remaining twenty-eight years of her life Vaughan was able to devote herself to preserving the history of her beloved Portsmouth.

Dorothy Vaughan: Historian

Although Dorothy’s vocation was librarian, her avocation was historian. In one of her many talks Dorothy reported her love of history came from her father, who was always tossing famous quotes to herself and her brothers. One of his favorite phrases was John Paul Jones: “I have not yet begun to fight.” When the Vaughan family moved to Portsmouth in 1917 they rented on State Street, just around the corner from the John Paul Jones house. When Dorothy learned the Patriotic League had set up a station at the house (to serve the Navy men based in Portsmouth in WWI), she went over to offer herself as volunteer so she could have a “peek” inside. Dorothy stated, “It was my first taste of Colonial Architecture, and it tasted good.”

Curious about her new city, Dorothy began to ask questions of her teachers and neighbors. When they ran out of answers they sent her to the public library to look for more information. Dorothy said it was her love of history which brought her to the library, and which led her to read many books about the early days of Portsmouth.

Several years later Dorothy was able to display her accumulated knowledge about Portsmouth while serving as a volunteer tour guide for the Chamber of Commerce during the summer of 1922. When she started her job at the Portsmouth Public Library in the fall of that same year, she had access to new sources of information: volumes of historical data and historical artifacts which were not available to the general public.

For many years librarians were the source of information, both common and obscure, on any variety of topics. Indeed, one could simply call a library and pose a question, and the librarian would scurry off to find the answer. Because Portsmouth was such an early and prominent center of commerce in New England, many people were interested in its history. Consequently, the employees at the Portsmouth Public Library were barraged with inquiries from school children, teachers, writers, and genealogists. Early in her career Dorothy Vaughan was tasked with finding answers to historical questions. If she couldn’t find information within the books and files at the library, she was sent over to see Rev. Alfred Gooding, who was the reigning town “historian.” While she was there Dorothy would ask him about many other matters; by the time he passed away in the early 1930s Dorothy had accumulated a storehouse of facts about Portsmouth history. For the rest of her professional career Dorothy Vaughan was the person everyone sought when they had questions about Portsmouth.

Many well-known writers came to the Portsmouth Public Library to conduct their research for their historical novels. Most prominent were Kenneth Roberts (“Boon Island” and “Northwest Passage”), Lois Lenski (“Ocean Born Mary”), John Mead Howells (“Architectural Heritage of the Piscataqua”), and Thomas Raddall (“The Governor’s Lady”). Dorothy was the initial point of contact for all these authors, but she expanded her role and continued to conduct research for each of them over the course of many years. Subsequently, these authors came to depend on Dorothy to check their facts, or provide “historical context,” or loan books on a long-term basis.

Dorothy Vaughan’s love of history led her to become involved with nearly every historical organization in the City of Portsmouth. Below is a list of organizations to which she belonged during her lifetime:

- Thomas Bailey Aldrich Memorial
- Colonial Dames of America (served two terms as president of NH chapter)
- Daughters of the American Revolution (charter member)
- Portsmouth Athenaeum
- Portsmouth Historic Associates
- Portsmouth Historical Society
- Strawberry Banke
- Warner House Association
- Wentworth Gardner-Tobias Lear Association

Dorothy was also a member of many state-wide and national organizations:

- New Hampshire Historical Genealogical Association
- New Hampshire Historical Commission (first female member)
- New Hampshire Historical Society
- Newcomen Society of North America
- Society for the Protection of New Hampshire Antiquities (SPNEA)

Additionally, Dorothy served as SPNEA’s “local contact” for their two properties in New Hampshire. Between 1940 and the mid-1970s she reported about the physical conditions, custodians, acquisitions, and other matters pertaining to the Jackson House and the Governor John Langdon Mansion, both in Portsmouth. Dorothy was never an arm-chair historian; she became actively involved in a multitude of projects, and was valued both for her historical knowledge and her long list of personal contacts.

Dorothy Vaughan: Preservationist

The preservation movement in Portsmouth had many “beginnings,” and Dorothy Vaughan was on the scene nearly every step of the way. In the 1930s architect John Mead Howells and historian Stephen Decatur, both summer residents of Kittery, Maine, had a vision for preserving the entire South End of Portsmouth as a “Maritime Port.” They persuaded the National Park Service to send a team to conduct a study of Portsmouth. Dorothy Vaughan, who had done background research for Mr. Howells (“The Architectural Heritage of the Piscataqua,” 1937), spent endless hours aiding with the historical and deed research on the properties. However, due to the economic constraints of the time period, the “Maritime Port” never came to fruition.
As the Depression lingered several important properties were put up for sale by their owners, who could not raise the funds to maintain them. In the summer of 1939 both the Wentworth-Gardner House (owned by the Metropolitan Museum of Art) and the adjacent Tobias Lear House (owned by the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities) were put on the block. The Friends of the Wentworth-Gardner and the Tobias Lear Houses toiled for three months to raise $10,000 to purchase both properties. In the end, money gleaned from tea/card parties, auctions and exhibitions, and a contribution from an anonymous donor saved the day. Dorothy Vaughan, who had been involved at the Wentworth-Gardner for many years, was an integral part of the public relations and organizing efforts. Indeed, she remained loyal to the “Friends” until the end of her life.

In 1940 Captain Chester Mayo, a high-ranking officer at the Portsmouth Navy Yard, spearheaded a committee of prominent citizens (including Dorothy Vaughan) to look into the idea of researching, restoring, and marking Portsmouth’s many old houses. The volunteers made solid progress, aided by the Director of the Historic Records Survey for the state of New Hampshire. However the project came to a halt when Capt. Mayo was re-assigned to new duties after the bombing of Pearl Harbor. Dorothy continued corresponding with the HRS office, but once again lack of funds prevented a preservation plan from reaching fruition.

In January of 1957 Professor Michael Hugo-Brut, a visiting researcher from Cornell University, came to the Portsmouth Public Library searching for information for his study of “Portsmouth: An English Crown Colony.” In the ten days he spent with Dorothy Vaughan he became enamored with the city, and she became enamored with his thoughts about preservation. Hugo-Brut was asked to present his research to the Rotary Club, and Dorothy Vaughan convinced her Rotarian brother to let her in the door, despite the “no women allowed” rule. When Hugo-Brut exhorted the Rotarian’s to save their historic city, Dorothy Vaughan heeded the battle cry.

Five months later (June 20, 1957) the Rotary was looking for a replacement speaker, and Dorothy’s brother Don asked her if she would like to fill the empty spot. Still brimming with energy from her discussions and subsequent correspondence with Michael Hugo-Brut, and angered by the seemingly un-noticed destruction of an historic house located directly across the street from the library, Dorothy pleaded with the Rotary Club to stop the destruction of historic Portsmouth, warning the city would soon be nothing more than a bunch of “honky-tonks” and “bowling alleys.” The businessmen in attendance that day, although not of a preservation mindset, certainly understood Portsmouth could profit if it could be cleaned up and “sold” as a historic destination (like the highly successful Williamsburg, VA).

What began as a plea for community consciousness grew into a crusade for Dorothy Vaughan. The Rotarians formed a study committee comprised of local businessmen, but included Dorothy for her expertise and contacts. After visiting Williamsburg and Sturbridge Village, the committee decided on a different model: rehabilitating existing buildings for re-use as a residential and commercial neighborhood with an integrated museum component. The City of Portsmouth had been given $600,000 in federal funds for an urban renewal project on the South End; the study committee worked to convince the government this new model of preservation as renewal would be economically viable. In the end the money was designated for use in a project dubbed “Strawbery Banke,” a colloquial name for the first settlement in Portsmouth.

Dorothy Vaughan became a leading force in Strawbery Banke. From her famous Rotary address in 1957 until the grand opening of the project in 1965 Dorothy Vaughan was giving speeches (over 150, by her count), meeting with local, state and national officials, and serving as President of the organization. For her efforts Vaughan was awarded an honorary doctorate from the University of New Hampshire (1966), and was invited to a “Women Doers” luncheon at the White House (1968).

Her work at Strawbery Banke made Dorothy a very public figure, and she was so honored for her contributions many times over. A file of newspaper clippings and a box of awards bears testament to the many accolades she received in her lifetime.

The bulk of these materials came from the aforementioned institutions; they were identified by stamps or numbers.
Miss Vaughan's large collection of postcards (approximately 5,000) was added to the collection of the NH Historical Society (as appropriate). Out of state postcards and duplicates were transferred to more appropriate collections.

Additional miscellaneous materials were transferred to outside institutions, as they did not pertain to Miss Vaughan, her work or her family. Series I: Personal and Professional Papers

The first series within the Dorothy M. Vaughan Collection contains materials which may be of interest to outside researchers, including:

Correspondence with noted authors: Lois Lenski, Kenneth Roberts
Genealogy: prominent Portsmouth families
Portsmouth Portraits: images and research materials
Strawberry Banke: correspondence, printed materials

 Vaughan's personal correspondence consists of seventeen boxes, with some files covering several decades. Almost without exception these letters were sent to Vaughan; there are no more than a dozen copies of letters she sent to others. The correspondence ranges from childhood greetings to love letters to discussions of history, genealogy and travel. Many of the writers thank Dorothy for her long, interesting letters or for her thoughtful gifts. Portsmouth and New Hampshire are favorite topics, as are family connections. By reading the letters sent to Dorothy Vaughan, one gets the sense she was a caring, active, and interesting correspondent. Personal correspondence is arranged by sender, in alphabetical order, and chronologically within correspondent.

Dorothy Vaughan was a prolific writer; there are eight document boxes of her published and unpublished papers. The topics are historical, with the majority addressing Portsmouth subjects. For five years (1930-1935) Vaughan wrote short pieces for The Beacon, a monthly guidebook of Portsmouth. She also wrote several articles for Historic New England, the publication of SPNEA. Vaughan hoped to write a book about Portsmouth history, and toiled for years over the content. The collection contains her prospectus for this project ("The Port of Portsmouth"), as well as correspondence with numerous publishers, all of whom rejected her proposal. Vaughan’s papers are arranged in alphabetical order, except for the Beacon articles, which are arranged chronologically (their original order, arranged by Vaughan).

For most of her professional life Dorothy Vaughan was a speaker (both paid and unpaid) at historical societies and civic organizations. Again her favorite topic was “history,” but in a very broad definition. Sometimes she gave the biography of a specific person (“Tobias Lear”); sometimes she tackled an entire group (“The Women of Portsmouth”); most often she spoke about the preservation of Portsmouth (“Saving Strawberry Bank;” “Portsmouth Preservation History”). Although the largest Portsmouth preservation Project (Strawberry Banke) was launched via Dorothy Vaughan’s Rotary speech on June 20, 1957, her true feelings about being pressed into service as a speaker were expressed in a piece of fiction entitled “In Defense of Local Talent.”

Now why is it that people think Home Town Talent is good enough in a pinch, but not good enough to be sought after and paid for? The times she has obligingly helped out are beyond remembering. They have all discovered she is willing, or at least can be coaxed into a talk, and she can give a good evening’s entertainment at no cost.

The twelve boxes of business correspondence include all the organizations and committees in which Miss Vaughan played a substantial role. Researchers interested in the history of the preservation movement in Portsmouth will find abundant material on the following organizations:

- Colonial Dames
- Daughters of the American Revolution
- Historic New England (formerly SPNEA)
- Jackson House
- New Hampshire Historical Commission
- Strawberry Banke
- Thomas Bailey Aldrich Memorial
- Wentworth-Gardner and Tobias Lear houses
- Warner House
Dorothy Vaughan spent a good part of her time and energy doing historical research for a variety of authors, most famously, Lois Lenski and Kenneth Roberts. Although the authors acknowledged Vaughan's contributions in their “Forward” or “Author’s Notes,” it does not appear there was monetary compensation involved. Some of the professional relationships with authors became personal relationships. For instance, Lenski's correspondence initially addressed historical issues, but later delved into discussions of home, family and health.

In the past, persons seeking general information about a municipality would send their questions to the local librarian and could expect to receive a written reply. Dorothy Vaughan kept a large file of the letters she received during the course of her long career at the Portsmouth Public Library. From this saved correspondence one can assume historical research took up a substantial portion of her time.

Dorothy Vaughan was a consummate researcher. Most of her work was in support of articles she was writing or speeches she was commissioned to give. However, some was done for pure pleasure (covered bridges) and some was done with the intention of producing a book (“Port of Portsmouth” and “Portraits of Portsmouth”). In particular, the “Portraits of Portsmouth” (tracking down all portraits painted of Portsmouth subjects) lasted a lifetime. Although Vaughan spent many years visiting and writing publishing houses (often with the help of personal contacts), and signed a contract (and received a retainer) to co-author “Ports of Portsmouth,” she never became a published book author.

The “remaining personal papers” include everything from Vaughan’s birth certificate and report cards, to tax bills, organizational memberships, invitations, scrap books and tax forms. The true essence of Vaughan’s life can be pieced together from the information gleaned from these myriad files.

Series II: Family Papers

Dorothy Vaughan was the last remaining member of her family; her brother Donald never married, and her brother Oscar did not have any children. Also, Oscar’s wife Grace was an only child. Dorothy and Donald lived their whole lives in their parents’ Portsmouth home. The Vaughans (particularly the women) venerated family history and Dorothy’s mother was a life-long genealogist. Consequently, Dorothy inherited (by default) all the family correspondence, photographs, and personal papers going back three generations. Vaughan’s family papers are arranged in alphabetical order, which is aided by the “Ancestral Chart of Dorothy M. Vaughan,” which is included in this finding aid.

The following surnames comprise the family papers:

Chandler
Gage
Jenkins
Parsons
Manley
Mansfield
Morse
Smith
Vaughan
Wilson

Most of these families resided in New Hampshire, primarily in Hebron, Hillsboro, Penacook (Concord) and Portsmouth. Others resided in northern New York (Redford and Morrisonville).

The correspondence within these files tells rich stories about topics ranging from New Hampshire migration to the plains (Edward and Osgood Gage); mill life in New Hampshire (Chastina and Lucy Mansfield); tales of a brother lost to the gold rush (Rufus Smith); and a woman scorned (Addison Gage and Lizzie Driscoll).

Those searching for Dorothy Vaughan’s “voice” may find it in the few surviving letters she wrote to her great-aunt (Julia Smith Vaughan), and her mother (Mary Smith Vaughan), and also in her mother’s correspondence to Julia Smith Vaughan or Julia Gage Smith.

Series III: Images

Within this series are both personal photos and historical photos. The first two boxes are images of Dorothy Vaughan and her family arranged in chronological order. Next are images of assorted people, primarily from Concord and Portsmouth, arranged in alphabetical order. Last are images of places, mostly Portsmouth, but also other towns in New Hampshire. These images are also arranged in alphabetical order.

The family photos include images of Dorothy Vaughan from birth to age 100, including both studio poses and amateur photos. There are many images of Dorothy’s immediate family (parents and two younger brothers), as well as her maternal grandmother, who lived with the Vaughan family for the final years of her life.

The images of “assorted” people were probably collected by Vaughan for their historical significance. Many of the images are of prominent Portsmouth citizens. Some of the images are in family albums, which were probably given to Vaughan by surviving members who would have disposed of them otherwise. It is possible the images of Concord/Penacook people were friends of Vaughan’s maternal grandparents (Oscar and Julia Gage Smith) or her mother (Mary Smith Vaughan), as they all lived in the area for years, and appeared to have a number of friends and acquaintances.

The images of places compliment Dorothy Vaughan’s historical research and long-held interest in anything pertaining to the history of Portsmouth, New Hampshire. Judging from the number of images, and the varying forms, it is probable Vaughan accumulated her collection from a variety of sources. A good portion of the mounted photos are inscribed “Helen Pearson collection.” Helen was a Portsmouth native, known for her talents in painting and music. Miss Pearson left several paintings to Vaughan, so perhaps she also left her photo collection. Other mounted photos are inscribed “Brewster.” Charles Brewster wrote a history of early Portsmouth, but it is hard to know if these images belonged to Brewster, or were included in his publications (he was also the editor of a local paper). In Vaughan’s official position of librarian at Portsmouth Public Library, or her un-official position as Portsmouth “historian,” she probable encountered many people who held in their possession images (and ephemera and historical documents) pertaining to Portsmouth. It is possible Vaughan’s considerable collection of ambrotypes, carte-de-visite, Daguerreotypes, glass negatives, lantern slides and tintypes were gifts from Portsmouth citizens.

Glass Negatives: Family - 2 boxes
All images are of Dorothy Vaughan’s family, though most are unidentified, they are probably of her mother and her parents and relatives (Mary Smith Vaughan and her parents, Julia Gage Smith and Oscar Smith.) They lived in Penacook and had a cottage at York Beach ME; most were probably taken in one of these places, though there were other connections in Hebron and Bristol NH. They seem to have been taken over just a few years in the late 19th or early 20th century. The collection as a whole is a view of an extended family and includes images of pets, all generations of family members, work places, agricultural activities, people in horse-drawn vehicles, houses. Some were taken indoors and record wallpaper and other décor of the period. They have been roughly sorted into categories listed below.
